

THE INCREASING ABILITY OF PT. PLN (PERSERO) in fulfilling the electricity demand for the public has spurred the demand for products of electric & household electronic in Indonesia. Easiness that can be obtained with the use of household electrical appliances has contributed to the increasing use of household electrical appliances and also encourages the increasing in industrial production of household electrical appliances made in Indonesia.

Domestic consumption of electrical appliances and home electronics has increased, although the volume of imports appears to increase as well. The increased volume of imports is actually happening on the products that have not been produced in Indonesia nor have the latest technology in terms of electrical energy savings. The export value of machinery / electrical equipment during the period of January-September 2010 reached U.S. $ 7,447.1 million, while in the same period in 2009, the value reached U.S. $ 5,676.6 million. During the period from January to September 2010, the export value of machinery and electrical equipments is the third highest after the export of mineral fuels whose value reached U.S. $. 13,666.2 million and exports of fats and oils of animal / vegetable (HS. 15) had export value that reached U.S.$ 10,175.5 million.

In the past decade, the Indonesian Telecommunication industries also experienced significant growth. The role of the telecommunication industries in the daily life and business activity has been very dominant and is considered as a major component.
